Dear Sir/Madam,

I am writing in to comment on the paper regarding Free Range Egg labelling. As with many consumers, I would like to purchase eggs produced in a humane manner where hens are allowed to live as they should be. Whether or not they taste any better than caged eggs, I believe if animals are to provide me with food, they should be treated with respect.

As per the Free Range Egg Labelling paper, there is currently no national standard/guidance/control over how eggs are labelled. I do not wish to purchase "free range" eggs at a premium only to contribute to the producer's profit margin and not actually improving the hens' lives.

I cannot say that I have read the entire paper in detail, but as a consumer, all I want is for the eggs to be clearly labelled and that the claims on their labelling is true to the actual situation.

Kind regards,
Su Li Sin
