Dear Sir/Madam,

I wish to make a submission regarding the consultation paper which proposes potential reforms to Deductible gift Recipient (DGR) tax arrangements.

It is clear to me that as a political motive in this review process. While ostensibly it relates to management arrangements for all not for profits, it singles out environmental organisations (ENGOs) for particular scrutiny. ENGOs have already been subject to considerable scrutiny in recent years. The house of Representatives standing committee on the environment's inquiry on the register of Environmental Organisations (Rea inquiry) was widely criticised as being political in nature. Shadow Attorney-General Mark Dreyfus Labor's front bench representative on the committee declared that the review was on "ideological attack" by the government on political advocacy. It appears that this new paper is simply more of the same.

During the (RFO) inquiry process, both the federal environment department and the Australian charities and not for profits Commission (ACNC) appeared before the committee. These are the entities responsible for managing environmental organisations on the (RFO) and the ACNC more broadly manages the not for profit sector.

Both the department and the (ACNC) said there were no significant problems with the current management systems for charities and (DGR) listed entities. The ACNC said that it has the appropriate enforcement powers to regulate charities.

In spite of this, a number of conservative politicians and some within the mining and fossil fuel sectors continue to demand that environmental groups have their DGR status revoked. Given that the Treasury raised in the majority report from the RFO inquiry, it is very ~~different~~ difficult to see this as anything other than a political witch hunt. I find it extremely disappointing that Treasury has therefore decided to reopen this issue by revisiting issues from a politically motivated inquiry.

There are considerable reporting requirements placed on the not for profit sector while it is essential that charities are well regulated, there is clearly unnecessary double ups in the current system. It is widely acknowledged that the application process for obtaining DGR registers, each of which is administered by different government departments, with variations in management and reporting requirements. It makes sense to streamline governance and reporting requirements for the not for profit sectors.

There is no doubt that there could be improvements in the management of deductible gift Recipient (DGR) listed organisations.

Accordingly, I recommend that DGR listed organisations should be managed by a single entity rather than multiple government departments. We believe the (ACNC) is most appropriate body to fulfil this task, given it was created for this purpose. Management should not occur through Ministerial discretion, government departments or the Australian Tax office (ATO).

Response to specific consultation paper questions.

4/ should the (ACNC) require additional information from all charities about their advocacy activities?

As shown in the (ACNC) compliance reports, there is a process already in place that allows members of ~~(ACNC)~~ the community (as well as a range of vested and politically motivated interests) to lodge complaints about the activity of individual charities. Additionally, the (ACNC) has identified 'political activity' as one of the five key areas. It will work on in the five key areas it will work on in the next two years to further development guidelines regarding behaviour which may put an organisations charity status at risk.

Why would the government require many thousand of organisations to provide additional information on their advocacy activity? It would increase the time and resources that charities need to put into reporting and compliance. The key loser in this regard would be smaller organisations, who could be exorted to ... struggle with having the resources to provide exhaustive details on advocacy activity, and the tax payer, who donates to a charity.

It seems strange that the federal government, which is interested in streamlining delivery of services, would propose increasing Red tape in terms of how charities are managed.

11. / What are stakeholders views on the idea of a having a general sunset rule of five years for specifically listed DGRs?

I do not support a sunset rule on specifically listed (DGRs) as noted in the treasury papers there are around 25,000 organisations endorsed as (DGRs). The time and effort that would be required both within charities and paperwork to be processed would be enormous. That would be at a direct cost to taxpayers through the need for charities to allocate ~~required~~ staff time to reapplying. It would also require substantial additional funding to the government body or entity responsible for processing applications.

Surely a much better option would be to stick with the current system. Where there is regular reporting and a complaint process that can identify charities which may be behaving ~~in~~ by an inappropriate ways and which may need to have their (DGR) status reviewed or revoked. The (ACNC) regularly reviews or de-lists charities that are reported or suspected to be non compliant.

12. / stakeholders views are on requiring environmental organisations to commit no less than 2% per cent of their annual expenditure from their public fund to environmental remediation, and, whether a higher limit, such as 10 per cent, should be considered? In ... particular, what are the potential benefits and the potential regulatory burden? How could the proposed be implemented to minimise the regulatory burden?

This issue was canvassed at great length during the (CREO) inquiry. There are many thousands of organisations already working on ecological remediation activity and some (DGR) listed (ENGO's) also carry out significant 'hands on ecological work' as part of their activity. Why would the government force (ENGO's) to limit or unduly constrain their activity? Once this could be seen as being politically motivated,

I do respect the many (ENGO's) that carry out remediation work, and understands the necessity of this work. However, it must be understood that in an era of climate change, there are many critical ecological threats that require advocacy and community campaigning if Australia is to address major ecological issues in a meaningful way. For example, there are ecological threats that are atmospheric (Climate change, ozone depletion, acid rain, etc) Some are aquatic (Ocean acidification, farm runoff, pollution, overfishing, etc). Some are genetic (persistent organic pollutants, potentially harmful genetic pollution from GMO's). Some, such as species extinction are "ecological" and holistic - relating to wide scale, not specific, pressures such as cumulative habitat loss. Many of these threats cannot be addressed in any conceivable way solely through "on-ground" activity, and require changes to regulations and laws governing or restructuring developments and current industrial, agricultural and other activities.

Therefore I do not support forcing (ENGO's) to spend a percentage of their funds environmental remediation. If the Treasury wishes to refers to the management of (CDAR) listed organisations, it should as part of this process reaffirm advocacy as being an entirely valid and necessary activity of charity.

13/ stakeholders views are sought on the need for sanctions. Would the proposal to require (CDARs) to be (ACNC) registered charities and therefore subject to (ACNC's) governance standards and supervision ensure that environmental (CDARs) are operating lawfully? Charities are already subject to substantial annual reporting requirements. If a member of the public believes that a charity is engaging in an inappropriate activity, they can make a complaint to the (ACNC).

I do not support the introduction of specific sanctions for environmental (CDARs). Certainly organisations with a vested interest such as the Minerals Council of Australia have been calling for sanctions, but this is clearly politically motivated.

Non violent protest is a cornerstone of sustaining a healthy democracy. Being engaged in peaceful protests does not imply that an (NGO) is involved in "illegal" activity. Donors who contribute to charities do so mindfully and are generally aware of the activities of that charity, so if they donate to a charity that engages in advocacy or protest, they support this activity. This questions (and the motivation behind it) intends to try and limit the activity and it could be argued the effectiveness of (ENGOs)

Recommendation 75 in the Treasury paper is especially relevant in this question

1) The committee recommended that administrative sanctions be introduced for environmental (DGRs) that encourage, support, promote, or endorse illegal or unlawful activity undertaken by employees, members, or volunteers of the organisation or by others without formal connections to the organisation.

This is a ridiculous proposal which would be impossible to manage. According to (ACNC) data, environmental charities employ around 10,000 staff and have close to 200,000 volunteers (which is a measure of the good standing of these groups in the eyes of the community). How could any organisation keep track of what all its volunteers do in their own time, let alone track the activities of people 'without formal connections to the organisation?' This is clearly part of a long and concerted campaign to limit the activities of (ENGOs). If (ENGOs) were to be "sanctioned" (eg have their (DGR) listing cancelled) because of the activity of volunteers or people "without formal connections to the organisation" it would rightly be seen as being politically motivated.

As noted earlier in this submission, both the federal environment department and (Ae.Ne) said during the (Reo) inquiry that there were no significant problems with the current management systems. The (ACNC) said that it has the appropriate enforcement powers to regulate charities. So why is Treasury even asking this question?

Conclusion

In conclusion, I urge you to put aside the recommendations in the paper which are clearly politically motivated, particularly Qs 4, 11, 12 and 13. A legitimate and non-politicised review of the governance arrangements for not for profits will be broadly welcomed, both by the the (NFP) sector if they remove unnecessary duplication, inconsistencies in how different charities are managed and reduce reporting burdens while ensuring transparency and rigor in the reporting process.

Any attempt to unduly limit the activities of environmental organisations or push them for working to protect the ~~natural~~ natural environment will be seen as clear political attack not only on the environment but also on the right of Australians to support legitimate environmental causes.

Yours Sincerely

Nick Pastalatzis
