There should be no charities anywhere, ever. The work that charities do is simply compensation for the work that Governments fail to do, but should. It is never, ever, the job of a charity to compensate for the abnegation of responsibility of a Government.

And it is never, ever, the job of a Government to tell a charity how to spend the money which I give to it.

Of course, given that any Government always has more than its fair share of cheats and liars, it is entirely to be expected that it will seek to prevent any charity from undertaking any action that will show up that Government's abnegation of responsibility.
