

The market

We all know that when one article gets auctioned off and a hundred interested buyers turn up then the sales price makes for a happy seller. But when many articles come up for sale and only a few buyers turn up then the seller is more likely disappointed.

Real economists have a term for this, called "Brown's law". When they talk about Brown's law many people don't know what is discussed. Economists invented and named many such laws in order to keep the public out of the conversation.

Now let us make a giant leap and jump into the stock market. Here are hundreds of stocks and potentially millions of buyers. Most of the buyers are not insiders so they seek advice from brokers and these days bankers. These brokers and bankers trade their knowledge for money called commissions. The game is simple: more trade equals more commissions for the players.

Now when for some reason the great money spinners like General Motors, Ford, steelworks etc etc, leave the market, that means that less shares are available for sale. But at the same time brokers and bankers start advising the public that money can be made on the market. Actually it is portrayed that more money can be made playing the market than by plain hard work.

Many start to believe this and join the ranks of buyers (clients for the brokers and banks). Net result: More buyers and many people lose interest in real work so real work output declines, which automatically drives up the stock market and makes the bankers happy. They invented a perpetual money spinning machine. We are told this is the economy of the nation.

The papers are glorifying it, the TV and radio are glorifying it, we all should join this merry-go-round so they say. Even Governments jump on the idea and give the banks unbridled permission to "perfect" this idea. Even indirectly they joined the movement by forcing people to save in pension funds that were then encouraged to invest in the market.

Here as in many places all over the world governments started to sell assets (freeways, railway stock, airlines, electricity, gas and water etc, etc) to free up capital. But all along the way more and more manufacturing industries close. That means many good stocks disappear from the market and yet more buyers are generated so stock prices keep rising. The banks, "smart" as they are, realise that the number of stocks (as well as the actual value) of many stocks actually declines.

Their solution: invent such things as stock options, derivatives, share swaps, etc, etc, all products that the public does not understand but the banks promote these sales. They even go as far as advising their clients to sell their valuables and borrow on top of that in order to make a killing on the market. Others sell houses to non-financial people, knowing full well that those will never be paid and will cause untold miseries to the unsuspecting buyers. All through this the MARKET keeps rising and rising and rising.

Governments all over the world adore this ECONOMY and do all sorts of gymnastics to keep this bubble going. Our government even gets involved by promoting FREE TRADE. So let us advise you on how to make money buying and selling shares in companies overseas.

But in fact, it is a great bloody swindle. It creates absolutely nothing worthwhile. The perpetrators get stinking rich and more and more ordinary people lose everything. Millions of people and whole nations become powerless to some extent, but in the end they will revolt. What happens then will not be pretty.

Why, oh why do even top financial people keep sanctioning these criminals?? Under false pretences they obtained permission to gamble and play with the finances and goods of whole nations. Put a stop to this looting and murdering. Why permit them to continue with this fallacy. Introduce a new version of a Glass Steagall type law and stop these criminals now.
