The proposal to reinstate the Accountant's Exemption and to allow financial advisers to provide incidental taxation advice is the most sensible legislative proposal to issue from the government in a decade with regard to financial services regulation.

This model worked extremely well and it was only a few individual's who had a problem with it. At any rate having now trialled the alternative let us hope that this proposal goes through and that clients can once again access timely cost-effective advice without voluminous unread paperwork that the current approach is generating.
