Further to my email below, how is paying superannuation on payday supposed to work on a practical level? Currently I use the Small Business Superannuation Clearing House for my super payments. They take multiple days to process super payments and I am concerned about late penalties due to this. I also have two trading names under my one ABN so I make two separate payments. I have to wait a few days for my first payment to clear before the Small Business Superannuation Clearing House will allow me to make my second payment. This time delay, which is no fault of my own, will subject me to penalties based on the proposed system. 3 days after pay day is too short a time frame.

Regards
Tanya

To whom it may concern,

I would like to lodge my objection to the proposed changes to pay superannuation every pay day as opposed to quarterly. We are a small business with already stretched resources and increasing the frequency of superannuation payments just further increases the administrative burdens we already face. The Australian Government and Australian Tax Office are constantly adding extra administrative duties to small business to make their job easier and put the extra work on us. We always pay the correct super on time and I do not feel we should be penalised due to the actions of others that do not comply.
